C. W. CRANE, 426 Montg'y st., San Francisco WM. GEDLING. Bullionville T. STARE. Hamilton

A SOVEL EXHIBITION, says the San Francisco Bulletin of November 13, was given this afternoon in the parlor of the Occidental Hotel, in a test of the celebratel talking machine invented by Professor Faber, of Vienna, which was attended by a number of scientific gentlement and representative of the tended by a number of scientific gentle-men and representatives of the press. In this wonderful piece of mechanism, which was perfected about eleven years ago, the inventor has closely copied the form and action of the different organs producing the human voice, and oper-ates them in the same manner, levers and springs taking the place of muscles and nerves. The machine has a bellows for lungs, a windpipe for the conduction of air, an india rubber larnys, with vocal cords modeled after those of man, and opening and closing in the same manner. opening and closing in the same manner. It has a fixel upper jaw of wood with a hip of leather. The lower jaw is made of India rubber, and the mouth has a palate India rabber, and the mouth has a palate of hard rubber, with a movable tongue of devible rubber. The nose is not piaced in the same position with the mouth, as in the human construction, but is placed below in such a position that the air passing out produces the nasal sound. The instrument speaks slowly but distinctly. It cannot, of course, modulate, because it is only a machine and not susceptible to those emotional effects into the presence of intellect. Fourteen sounds are all that are used in the machine for the production of speech. toen sounds are all that are used in the machine for the production of speech. They are the vowels A, E, I, O, U, and the consonants, B, D, G, hard, L, D, W, F, S, Sh. All the other sounds are produced out of these by combination and by modifying their action by either separating the vocal cords or bringing them together. The machine was manipulated by Madame Faber with great dexterity, and her acquirement of such skill must have been the result of careful and antiring practice. It was made to utter a plain sound, a rolling sound, a sighing sound. It repeated the letters of the alphabet, all the numerals, several English sentences, and many proper names, as well as mames and sentences in different languages. The pronunciation of eat languages. The pronunciation of most of the words essayed was phoneti-cally exact, but the entire absence of any effect of modulation gives the voice a sepulchral if not absolutely horrible im-pression. The talking machine is small and compact, occupying no more space than a common melodoon, and is at-tached to a highly-ornamented gilt table. At the point of utterance a female face or mask is attached, and the voice proceeds from the month. Every part is open to inspection, and its appearance does not indicate the wonderful qualities which it possesses. As previously published, this carious piece of mechanism was saddly domest by company to the control of the control of the carious piece of mechanism was saddly domest by company to the control of the carious piece of mechanism was saddly domest by company to the care of the ca by damaged by rough usage on the jour-ney overland, and Professor Faber has since been busily engaged in placing it again in order. As to its utility and possible benefits, of course the machine amounts to nothing more than a marvellous specimen of ingenuity, representing many years of patient labor and experi-ment. It has been exhibited throughout Europe and the Eastern cities, and will shortly be presented in public here. Designation of medicine and surgery. Like other people, they have many aches and pains; and, as everybody knows, one of the most torturing pains is an aching tooth. In Japan, like all the rest of the world, there are persons who now and then want a tooth pulled out; and the only Japanese contrivances for this are a wooden mallet and a stick. The professor of denistry, instead of sitting in his office with a stock of mysterious and frightful instrument, goes traveling over office with a stock of mysterious and frightful instrument, goes traveling over the country, carrying a box covered with brass ornaments, and containing some brass ornaments, and containing some brass ornaments, and wedges. When he wood in any part of the city. brass ornaments, and containing some little mallets and wedges. When he meets with a person who wishes to part company with an aching tooth, the weiges are pressed in between the tooth and gum, and then forced down with the mallet, until, by hammering and prying, the tooth is made so loose that it can be pulled out with the fingers. The poor patient suffers very much. Sometimes pieces of the jaw are broken away with pieces of the jaw are broken away with the teeth, and it is said the patient dies

Jerrold's was written in almost microscopic characters with a fine gold pen, and so close that one of the sides of the small foolscap octavo paper he used would nearly fill a solid brevier column of Punch. Mr. A Beckett's was altogether the reverse, being written very wide apart on post octavo paper. It had a very curious appearance, for he began up in the left hand corner, and widened out his lines till he finished the page, in a diamond shape, down in the opposite corner. When written thus, one of his pages would make about six lines of type. Mr. Dickens wrote a very unreadable hand, and his manuscript was full of alterations, deletions and interdineations. old's was written in almost microscopic

AUSTRALIAN GOLD.—The value of the gold imported from the Australian Colonies has increased this year to a rather sensible extent, the value of the receipts to August 31st being estimated at £6.215.648, as compared with £4.082,822 in 1872 and $4,625,142 in 1871. In these totals the month of August in each year figured for £1,040,838, £571.122, and £580,089, respectively. Queensland is now producing gold at the rate of 210,000 ounces per annum. Quartz reefs at Yam Creek, 90 miles south of Fort Darwin, in the northern territory of South Australia, are spoken of as rich. The gold fields of Auckland, New Zealand, have presented an improvement of late. The Hellver diggings, in Tasmania, have been almost deserted, owing to stormy weather. A rich discovery is said, however, to have been made on Bullock Creek, at the Malahike estate, in the district of Fingal, Tasmania.—[London Times, Sent. 28th.] the district of Fingal, Tasmania.—[London Times, Sept. 28th.
